

Social media is inherently a selfish medium

"No WiFi, talk to each other!"

A statement written on a cafe's wall caught my eye. Seeing a group of friends or family sitting around a table with faces buried in their mobile phones is a common sight in India nowadays.

In this age of internet, social media has become a curse for many. With increasing prevalence of trolling, fake news and hate messaging, social media has become the reason for many depressed individuals. The issue of invasion of privacy and data breach highlighted during Facebook and Cambridge Analytica fiasco has given another cause of concern. The medium made for bridging gaps has resulted in creating rifts between people.
