"We the people of India having solemnly resolved to constitute India into a sovereign, socialist, secular Republic...."

The preamble of our constitution hints at wide constations of how we want our state to be. Indian constitution is a perfect blend of best of the other constitutions of world. From fundamental rights of USA to Liberty, fraternity and equality from France to fundamental duties of USSR, we really have it perfect.

The framers of the Indian constitution have tried to keep it both rigid and flexible to serve the exigencies of time and ~~at~~ that. What is most unique part about it.

So has freedom ever been well defined - absolutely not!

With the nation rapidly advancing, situations demanding the best for its people, choices expanding at a rapid rate, we are in a state of ever evolutionment and so is our constitution as well.

From 8 schedules, 385 articles to 12 schedules and more than 400 articles, constitution has evolved from emergency of 1976, protest for demands of schedule and tribal areas.

Also comes here the concept of "Judicial review" that keeps on adding what we call the expanding scope of constitution.

The recent debates over religious matter brought to limelight the Doctrine of Essentiality (Shirur Mutt case) — these are ^{how} bold example of well ~~nothing but~~ ^{constitution} evolving.
The framers of constitution has left it to us to let put / add changes according to our needs and wants, and no doubt we have proved to be successful to a greater extent by being a sensitive nation. We do need to be very cautious while expanding the freedom and make sure that it should not come at the cost of disintegration of our society.
